ABSOLUTE STRAIGHTENING

Lactic Acid and Lactobionic Acid

Derived from lactose, they have the ability of retain water inside the hair, to keep it moisturized. These acids are antioxidants, cellular regenerators and pH regulators. Both acids contain bacteriostatic agents that prevent the bacteria growth by keeping the scalp dry and healthy.

Because of the low pH, when applied to the hair, they slightly dilates the cuticles through the conductive lactic acid, allowing the entry of the straightener agent, the lactobionic acid, so it can act inside the hair. It breaks a part of sulfur bridges that are between two amino acids named cysteine, which are responsible for the hair's spiral or wavy shapes, and resistance.

HOW TO USE

1. With hair clean and dry, divide it into four parts.
2. Apply the Therapy Liss in small hair sections one by one, from half centimeter of the scalp until the edges. Spread evenly the product until all the hair strands are moistened. Do not apply it directly on the scalp.
3. Pause for 60 minutes if it's a resistant hair, or 40 minutes if it's a thin or fragile hair.
4. Remove the product's excess with a brief rinse or a thin comb.
5. Dry the hair thoroughly, without brushing.
6. Use the flat iron with a temperature of 230°C, from 10 to 12 times on each thin hair section. For thin or fragile hair, use the flat iron with a temperature from 180°C to 220°C, from 15 to 20 times on each thin hair section.
7. After finishing the hair stylist can choose to rinse the hair.

*The secret of a good hair straightening is always to set the proper temperature of the flat iron for each type of hair, always sorting out small hair sections all around the head, which will guarantee a perfect and uniform result.
